MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Albany Evening Journal.

Letter from Mr. Weed. BELFAST, (Listand) Aug. 3, 1843.

We left Dublin with an American party, six strong, in the Royal Mail Coach for this place. The distance is 80 Irish or about 100 American iniles, and was driven in 12 hours. The suburbs of Dublin, in this direction, are less beautinew village, is the first place for changing horses. Here is an ancient Tower in good repair.

This place abounds in antiquities, among which is a Priory erected by King Richard II.; an Augustine Abbey; a Castle once inhabited by the Archbishop of Armagh; the remains of Monasterborie Abbey, &c. &c There are several fine modern structures, among which is St Peter's church and spire, I hewn stone; the Linen Hall, Corn Market, Barracks, Hospital, &c. The general aspect of the town, howindications of prosperity. Its population, to a great extent, are evidently unemployed, and of Drogheda, extending some two or three miles from the Irish Sea, are vainly inviting the trade and commerce for which the town and its inhabitants are languishing. There is a deep and strong Repeal sentiment at Drogheda, which, for the present, keeps hope alive, but when these hopes shall be blasted, should that unfortunately happen, desperate men, with hungry wives and children, will do desperate things. Dundalk is a fine town, with several spacious public buildings, and is surrounded with rich fields and parks, but is not otherwise interesting. There is a field here, and hereabouts, for the benevolent labors of Father Mathew. Newry is a pleasant, bustling, active, manutrade. Hillsborough is a pretty town, surrounded by an industrious and thrity agricultural population, whose nest, whose washed stone cottages present an aspect of checitalness and comfort seldom found in Irelians, much of which sattributed to the liberality of Lord Downshire, a wealthy Nobleman, who in varous ways, gives encouragement to industry, ex ends patronage to enterprise, and manifests a land; ble solicinde for the welfare of his tenants. The Park, Cast's and broad Domain of Lord Downshire, each furnishing evidence of great wealth, are in full view from the toad. Next to Hillshorough comes Lisburn, in Antrim, known abroad by the excellence of its Damasks, which are fabricated here in great quantities. Its Cambric and Muslin fabrics are always in much request. The view north from Lisburn is bold and picturesque. Beyond a rich valley, commences an elevation which rises for several miles, and terminates in a high mountain extending as far as the eye can reach, and under the shoulder of which Belfast is situated,

These mountains would resemble some of the bold ones in New Hampshire, except that upon every patch of s il, wheat, or oats, or barley, or rye, is seen waving.
From Lesburn it is but seven miles to Belfast, a place which bears so strong a resemblance to American cities that I became at once domesticated here. There is much intercourse between Belfast and New York. This has produced an assimilation in manners too obvious not to be noticed. I dropped into familiar conversation with merchants at the hotel here, and felt almost as much at ease as I should have been at the Astor House. This qualification, by the way, is not strong enough. It is quite as impossible for the guests of the Astor to be as much at ease at any other hotel, as it is to find elsewhere the enjoyments and luxuries that surround you there. I know something now of the hotels of England superiority over American hotels; but I have no hesitation in saving, that for half the money paid for apartments at the very best hotels in London,

Not more than one half of the looms are now employed, though business is reviving. Linens are manufactured at Belfast for all parts of the world. America, however, is regarded as their hest market, though most of the orders from our country reach the manufacturers through English houses.

I intended to have said a word, in another place, about the Irish Poor House system. Each county has its spacious and expensive poor ful, and exhibit a population less comfortably house, for the erection and support of which the housed than in other quarters. Ashbourne, a property of Ireland is heavily taxed. But I am told that the system does not work well. The poor, unless driven to the direct extremity, will The next point is Drogheda, a town situated not go to the poor houses. They are not only scrubbed clean when they go there, but are required to perform daily ablutions in cold water! "It is had enough," said one of them, "to be compelled to drink their ugly cold water, bad luck to them, without having the life frozen out of you with washing in it every morning.'

The coach, at several of the first changes out of Dublin, was beset by an unusual number of very importunate beggar women, whose claims were urged, sometimes in the most piteous acever, is any thing but pleasant. It presents no cents, and at others, with an adroitness and humor quite amusing. In handing this lady into the coach after dinner, a woman approached us saying "your honor will sure give something to a poor starving widow for the sake of the sweet hidy that owns you." To get rid of this mode of attack, I gave her a penny. This encouraged another, who exclaimed "vour honors a happy man, with such a beautiful lady by your side -Don't forget a poor creature with eight starving childhers." She got her penny and departed only to give place to a third, who began, "Long life to your honor and your honor's beautiful lady. May you find the sweet l'itle ones quite well when you get home." The Union of Tylerism and Locofocoism an exponent of the Virtue of Parties.

The Union of Tyler and the Locofoco party by which the present administration has become, in modern parlance, democratic, affords abundant material for contemplation. John Tyler soon after being called to assume the head of the government began to make provision for his continuance in office and to show to the Whigs in Congress and elsewhere that he was disposed to bring the patronage of the government to lavor their interests if they would adopt him as fourteenth number of Harpers' Edition of Ale their leader and give him the opportunity for continuance in the high office to which he had been called by the death of Harr son. The golden vision of power and place and pay was spread out before them and all at his command, was made to glitter before them on the single condition of his adoption. But to the eternal honor of the Whigs and to the honor of manhood be it said, the shower of certain wealth, the security of place and the exercise of power were indignantly rejected when offered as the reward of treachery and the abandonment of principle, save by the few who Peter like, would willingly sell their Saviour for thirty fins! It should be considered too that the Whigs in Congress could have gone in for Tyler and mod fied their views and forsaken their principles with little apparent and open, though to be sure not less real actual abandonment of principle, than their apponents. Tyler was nominally with them and the neceseary changes and the work of corruption could have been progressive and apparently mutual and so contrived as not to have appeared at once in its gross and naked and abominable, though true character But the Whigs were true to their principles as the needle to the pole, and hurled back the brilliant offers so lavishly made. The great mass-all-save here and there one, prefered to be true men without place and pay and power to having all at their disposal and be at the nod of a vain minded false hearted traitor to his country. It was but a feeble and sorry band of corrupt men found in the Whig ranks and those the golden ban effectually caught.

But how changed is the scene when we look at the opposite party. There men at the first manifestation of difference between Tyler and the Whigs-before any offer was made them, were at the elbow of the President cap in hand, and their faces wreathed in similes and subserviency cozing out of every pore in their bodies. Tyler, flading his lust repulsed where he desired it should be accepted, found a commodity in the market, of easy purchase, and with the patronage of the government, completed the bargain, save here and there a tew, who manfully made their protest, dispising alike the traitor and his spoils. With less exgerness the same points mighthave been gained with less open and undisguised surrender of all principle and decency, for pay and power The indignant tebuke of the few has driven those who secretally preided to the unhaly embrace to represent that the ap prosches were all on one side and that although Tyler and the "Democratio" (Heaven same the marky party lived together assumed wife ye the wife was perfectly free from obligations adelity. But evidences to the contrary are con - sensily multiplying and the following letter in sespectate to orctain Democratic resolutions is "Whose man s bread I do est
